

Bindi set to become a movie star

Move over Dakota Fanning — Bindi Irwin is taking over Hollywood! The daughter of late Crocodile Hunter Steve Irwin has bowled over a number of top Hollywood producers with her grace, charm and humor in the face of tragedy and is now being considered for some major film roles.

Eight-year-old Bindi is on a short list of actresses to play the title role in a planned new version of Alice in Wonderland. "Bindi has that It factor that all the best kid actors have," says a Hollywood insider.

While movie bosses feel Bindi (above) has the potential to be the next Shirley Temple or Dakota Fanning (left), she has said she wants to follow in her late father's footsteps.

In recent months, Tara, 31, has cleaned up her act and had corrective plastic surgery to fix a botched boob job.

Tara lands a new film role

Tara Reid hopes her upcoming flick, Honestly, will encourage movie-makers to take her seriously. "I want to show that I am an actress," the former party girl says. "I just wish a director would believe in me." And one finally does — her brother! Tara's sibling, director/producer Tommy Reid, recently inked a deal to shoot the film about a private investigator who sniffs out cads for cash.

The movie, set to begin shooting this summer, will be her first starring role in two years, and Tara believes it could establish her as a credible actress.

◀ Tara's partying earned her a reputation as a wild child.
